Q: Rails - Different User Page for each user
Im building my first rails application and was wondering how I could have a user only see pages they can access if they are a member of a certain usergroup. For example, if a user is part of usergroup "supporter" they can only see pages related to supporters. How can I achieve this? A: There are various approaches to this, some good, some bad. The purest and most simplistic approach would be to name each controller something like users_controller.rb and put the users action(s) in there. In the view, you would want to specify what controllers to use based on the user's group, something like this: If you do not want to do this, you will have to name your controller something like this and pass the group name to the controller's action.

def index @user = User.find(params[:id]) @groups = @user.groups @user.member_of = @groups.collect {|g| g.id} @group_names = @groups.collect {|g| g.name} respond_to do |format| format.html # index.html.erb format.xml { render :xml => @user } end end def show @group = Group.find(params[:id]) @users = @group.users @group_names = @group.users.collect {|u| u.name} respond_to do

What's New in the?

Fancy Thumb allows you to customize the names and icons of the thumb drives available for the PC. The program is designed in such a way that it creates a menu entry on the Windows Explorer right-click menu. Simply right-click on a drive and the program will automatically be executed. You can then customize the label and choose icons from your image files with the .ico file type. After making the settings, you can also reboot the PC to apply the changes. It's possible to do so without changing any of the settings, in which case the changes will be applied automatically after the next reboot. By the way, the process is pretty fast as there are no special actions involved. Since there are no additional third-party components used, the application doesn't have a button for restoring the previous configuration. This is why we would recommend using the utility to modify the settings only, if you are planning to carry out some major changes.
