The folks from the New York Department of Financial Services sent out a press release announcing that they're giving $1M in financial grants to four New York start-ups. These start-ups are developing new and unique ways to manage customer accounts, like new ways to spend cash at stores and various games that users can play at locations. The four are:

SanchoPad SanchoPad is a mobile banking and payments app that allow users to spend money at a debit card from their phone. Users will be able to use it to pay for parking, home goods, and groceries. It can be used in New York City, Buffalo, Rochester, Binghamton, Syracuse, and on Long Island.

Electric Transporter Electric Transporter is an app that allows users to get a ride with their mobile device. People have been doing this for a while, but they've been relying on a phone call or an old-fashioned elevator. The app uses real-time location data to connect people to vehicles. Currently, users are only available to New York City, Buffalo, Rochester, Binghamton, Syracuse and, presumably, New Jersey. iStore Rewards iStore Rewards is a mobile game for iOS that simulates a shopping store. You place items in a grid and get credit points to spend at the store. Since everyone likes to shop at the same store and it's convenient, this is a way to get people to buy your apps, games, and other products. TapTrail TapTrail is not a new financial product, but it has been going through a rebranding. It is a mobile app that's meant to help users manage their money. It can be used to scan a bar code to add money to your account, or there is a mobile app. This app will allow users to use your tapTrail account to access your balance, add money, and adjust recurring payments like utilities and credit cards. It is iOS only. "Grant programs like these, which are intended to encourage innovation and new ideas, are a good way to help New York State and its residents, especially those who live in underserved areas, participate in the digital economy," said Superintendent Maria Vullo.
