the india highway exhibition and its companion book were also made possible in large part through the support of the british council, who funded a wide range of activities in london and the uk that focused on india's contribution to the world of art. the british council's indian art council and india art initiative contributed to the event, as did the museum of modern art in new york, which in 2008 held a month-long exhibition of indian photography. the serpentine gallery was also supported by the getty foundation, and by the arts council (london). the indian highway exhibition and the book were also supported by a large number of private institutions and foundations. for example, the arts council (england) supported the event, providing grants to cover the cost of travel, accommodation, and exhibition support. the rfk centre for the arts also supported the exhibition, in part with grants that supported the indian highway book. the organisers of the event also received funds from a number of institutions, including the indian high commission and the british council. the book is illustrated with photographs and documents as well as a digital archive of photographs and other objects from the nehru centre, and links to websites that document the history of the building. it includes an extensive bibliography. india highway will also feature work by the scholar shivam gupta. after the breaking down of modernity: the cultural politics of popular cinema is a study of the transformation of mainstream hindi cinema from the 1960s to the present day. in the process, i uncover hitherto unexplored patterns of audience-driven and state-influenced change. with a focus on the increasing secularist bent of hindi cinema, i track the history of its foundational moments, ranging from the creation of the myth of 'shivaji' to the rise of shah rukh khan. i also trace the impact of the post-liberalization deregulation of the indian media, the rise of secular political parties, and more recently, social media on the changing ways in which hindi cinema narrates the life of an indian citizen.
